A note from our director:

This type of a show is unique in that it does not begin with an existing script. It began with a children's book, music and an idea. From there, all the action, specific characters, and circus acts had to be created. What you will witness today is the culmination of over 150 hours of group rehearsal, not to mention the countless hours these performers and musicians spend honing their craft. It has been my tremendous honor to weave together this intricate tapestry of talents, abilities and creative ideas into the performance you will see today.

Oscar Wilde's story is simple and relatable, but also profound. We see the Giant close himself and his garden off to the children and the town. But we also witness a change and an ending full of hope. I do believe that Christ came into this world to enter the garden of our heart and soften our defenses. He breaks down the wall that isolates us from God the Father and from relationship with other humans. It is his wounds of love that make it possible for us to go with Him to His eternal garden in paradise when this life is over. I hope that today's show brings you joy, helps you ponder and gives you hope.
